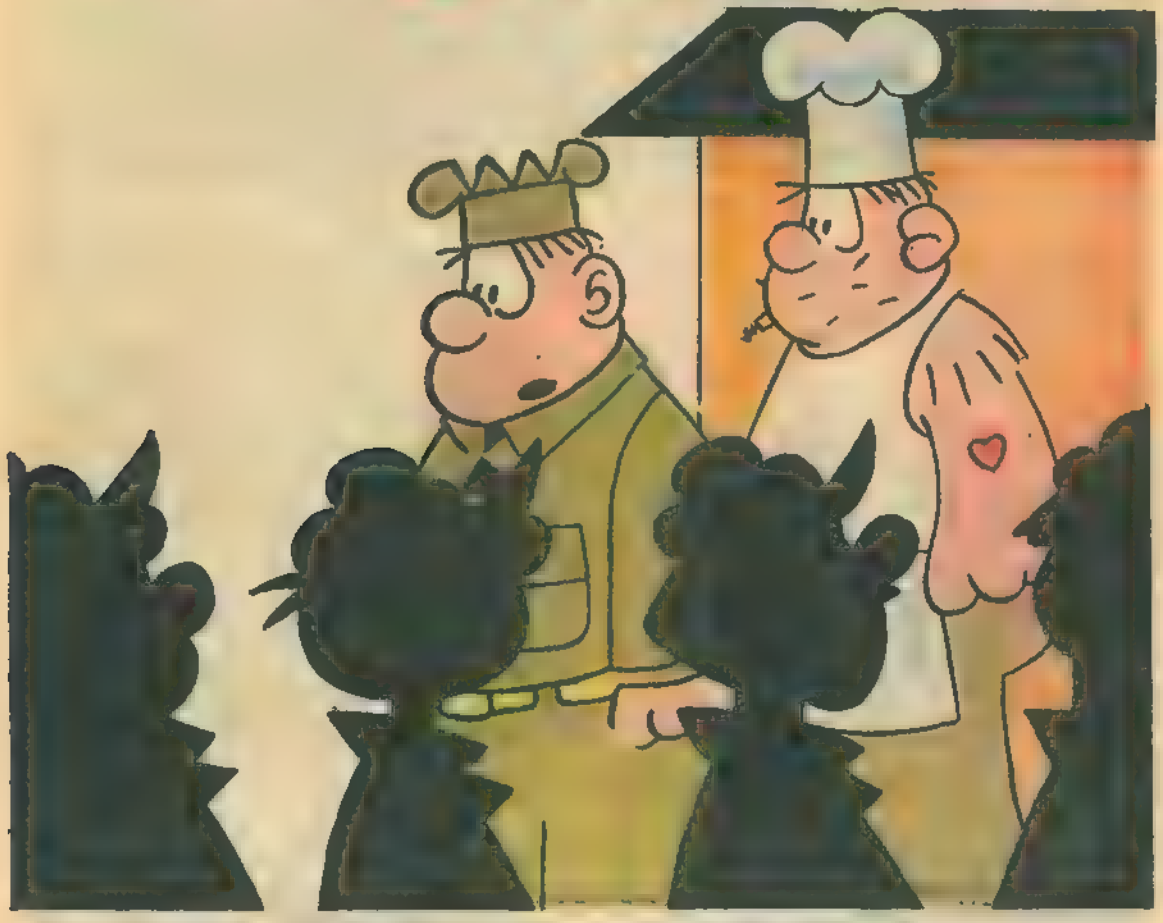
WHERE ARE YOU GONNA GET ELECTRICITY OUT HERE?!!
AN EXTENSION CORD?! HOW DO YOU EXPECT TO PLUG IT IN?! WE'RE THREE MILES FROM CAMP!!
I HAD TO ASK!

THE PHANTOM FOOD SNATCHER



"Rumble! Rumble!! Rumble!!!" Horrible, loud, ominous rumbling noises echoed through Beetle Bailey's barracks.

"Yikes! It sounds like the end of the world!" — stuttered Zero as he knelt down and began to say his prayers.

"Relax, Zero," instructed Killer who covered his own ears with a pillow from his bunk. "It's not the end of the world. The weatherman said we'd probably have thunderstorms this morning. These terrible noises are just the forerunners of the storm. From the sound of these first, few rumbles, it sounds like we're in for a real dilly!"

"I hate to disagree with you, Killer, but that is not thunder!" said Plato as he looked up from the book he was reading. "It's much, much, too loud to be thunder. I'm quite positive that it is a mild earthquake. Nothing else in the world could make a noise like that!"

— "You're all wrong," laughed Beetle, who was lying down on his bunk. "It's not the end of the world, and it's not a thunderstorm or an earthquake!"

"How can you be sure?" the others asked him.

Beetle sat up and checked his watch. He smiled and nodded. "I'm sure," he began. "It's ten o'clock! Three hours have passed since morning chow! Sarge Snorkel is getting hungry right about now. That terrifying noise that you all heard was his stomach rumbling."

Just then, Sarge walked out of his room and into the main barracks. He was holding his stomach with both hands. Loud, rumbling noises were coming from his belly. "Boy! Am I ever hungry! I think I'll go over to the mess hall and see if Cookie has any extra goodies I can munch on," he announced as he walked out of the door.

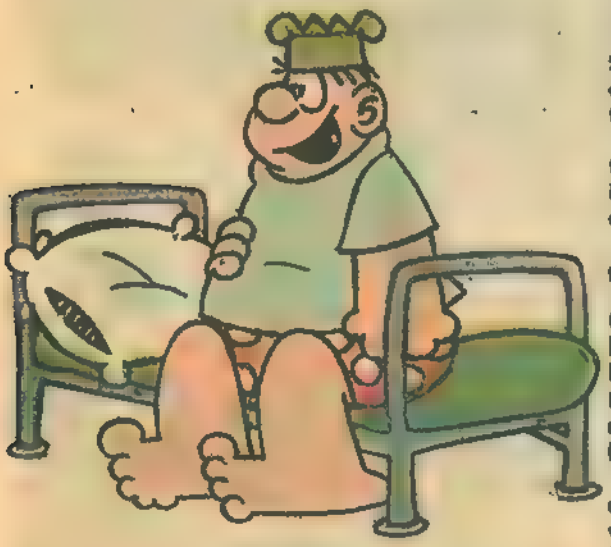
Wherever Sergeant Snorkel went — the rumbling noises went too! "See! I told you it was the Sarge," laughed Beetle as everyone listened to the Sarge rumble off toward the mess hall.

Cookie was glad to see his old buddy, Sarge Snorkel. The plump sergeant was the only one on the post who really appreciated Cookie's kitchen talents. There were never any leftovers when the sergeant was around. His hardy appetite was more handy than a garbage disposal.

"Hi, old pal," said Cookie when the Sarge stepped into the kitchen. "You don't have to tell me why you're here. I knew! I could hear your stomach from a mile away!"



"What kind of goodies do you have for me today?" asked the Sarge. "I hope it's something sweet. I have an uncontrollable craving for chocolate chip cookies," he said.

"That's strange," said Cookie. "You must have E.S.P. or something. I made a special batch of chocolate chip cookies just the other day. They were a special treat for the colonel. I saved you about four dozen cookies. They're in the bread box near the freezer," said Cookie as he pointed at the box that contained the chocolate chip goodies.

Sarge Snorkel ran across the room and flipped up the lid of the bread box. His ear to ear smile disappeared when he looked inside the container. "We've been robbed!" he screamed sadly. "This box is empty!"

"Someone must have sneaked in here last night and eaten up your cookies," said Cookie to the Sarge.

"The dirty rat is going to pay for this," threatened Sarge Snorkel. "Stealing food out of the mess hall is against regulations. I'm going to sleep in here tonight and trap the fiend who stole my goodies!"

That night Cookie put two cakes in the bread box.

"The thief won't be able to resist these," said the Sarge as he looked at the delicious cakes and licked his chops. "I'll stay right here and catch the thief when he tries to steal the cakes!"

Cookie shut off the mess hall's lights and locked up the kitchen with the Sergeant still in it. When he came in the next morning, he found Sergeant Snorkel sound asleep on the floor.

"Wake up!" screamed Cookie. "The cakes are gone!"

Since the Sarge couldn't stay awake on guard duty, Cookie volunteered to take his place. That night, he baked two blueberry pies and put them into the bread box. He shut off the lights and sat down in the kitchen to wait for the phantom food fiend. Cookie had no more will power than Sergeant Snorkel. Soon, he fell fast asleep.

About three o'clock in the morning, Cookie was awakened by a strange, rumbling noise. Someone was in the kitchen. He was stealing the pies! Cookie flicked on the light.

The phantom food fiend was standing near the open bread box and munching on a blueberry pie. It was Sergeant Snorkel. He was dressed in his pajamas and walking in his sleep!
